Goes to a student with an interest in the Anthropology of Warfare as was the specialty of the late USC professor Harry Turney-High

The fellowship will be available to graduate students who are accepted and enrolled (minimum 6 hours) into the Department of Anthropology at the University of South Carolina. Applicants for the fellowship will submit a copy of all application materials made to the Department of Anthropology at the University of South Carolina, Columbia (admissions forms, letter of intent, transcripts, GRE scores, letters of reference, writing sample, etc.). In addition they will submit a letter of intent (maximum of two pages) specifying how their research goals and career interests will further the goals and intent of the Battleground Fellowship Trust. Priority will be given to applicants who propose a project, discuss its importance, and articulate specific objectives, a research plan, and expected outcomes of their work. When appropriate, applicants are encouraged to also submit a one-page budget summary linked to the specifics of their research plan.
