“Really? You don’t look like an Indian...”: An Examination of Native American Representation through Mascots in South Carolina Hannah Bauer, SC Commission for Minority Affairs

This presentation examines the difference between the way Indigenous Americans have traditionally represented themselves (and continue to do so), the way they have been represented by others, and how these differences have culminated in a great debate: To mascot or not to mascot? Bauer brings the examination into present day South Carolina by showing where, like most places in the United States, the tradition of Native American mascots in sporting traditions still endures. She aims to amplify voices on both sides of the debate so that the audience can make an informed decision on this salient issue.
