

Time for East Meck to shut down the ICC

East Meck allows new clubs to be formed at the beginning of every school year. Many students create their own clubs, but not all of them succeed. Students expect the only challenges will be the paperwork and convincing others to join. They do not expect the heavy burden from a mysterious, looming force: the ICC.

The Inter Club Council (ICC) requires a representative from each club to attend meetings once a month after school on set Tuesdays. At these meetings, all clubs receive updates about events from Congress. The clubs are also supposed to share anything they have planned and take notes of the meeting to inform the rest of their members. Clubs are put on probation if their representative misses a meeting or if they do not participate in the events. A club can even be shut down if they miss more than two meetings.

It cannot be denied that there are advantages to having an ICC. The ICC meetings allow clubs to know what other clubs are planning and receive updates from Student Congress. The clubs can also work together for a good cause, as seen by the East Meck "Rice for Life" hunger drive.

But we can no longer ignore the flaws behind the ICC. For larger and more established clubs such as Project Unify and Dream Team, it is easier to meet the requirements put forth by the ICC. They can easily send another member to a meeting if the original representative cannot attend. This is harder for newer clubs who are still reaching out for members.

The ICC also requires clubs to join in on homecoming and campus beautification events or face probation. Once again, larger clubs have more people to work on decorating a door or cleaning up the school on a Saturday. Small clubs struggle in getting two members for campus clean-up, when students can only sign in under one club.

This is all assuming the founder of the club filed the paperwork in time. What happens to the group of students who find a passion for figure skating in November? They have to wait almost a year to form a club because the ICC will not allow them to join the meetings.

Many high schools do not have an ICC and their clubs still operate in a functional manner. East Meck continues to have an ICC due to tradition, as the school has had one for decades. But we must admit that the disadvantages of having an ICC now outweigh the benefits.

In our opinion, East Meck no longer needs an ICC. Newer clubs have a hard time staying afloat against already established ones. When various tasks are assigned by the ICC, many which do not help the actual club, new founders must scramble to complete them. These students should not worry about their club facing probation over a decorated door or a dish with beans and rice.

It is now time for clubs to rise against the ICC and shut it down, instead of the other way around.

Video announcements should be daily endeavor

A teacher struggles to quiet their class as the Pledge of Allegiance begins over the loudspeaker. Students try to listen for scheduling changes for their clubs. Athletes can barely hear the announcement of their winning game from the night before.

This is a typical morning in an East Meck classroom. We believe that holding video announcements each morning would allow information to be heard and students to be more interested in news around the school.

Video announcements are more interesting than audio announcements, prompting more students to pay attention because they can see the person giving them the information that they need. A visual representation can also aid students in remembering important to-dos.

Having video announcements will allow multimedia-like images and videos to be shown. This opens up a range of creativity to make announcements more interesting and memorable.

Although it may seem unachievable to some, East Meck is capable of broadcasting announcements daily. Many schools around CMS, like Myers Park, display their morning announcements on video. Even middle schools, like Piedmont IB, pull off daily video announcements.

Photo by Elise Palmer

East Meck airs morning announcements on television every homeroom day.

Right now, we only have video announcements in homeroom on Wednesdays because of a concern with the amount of effort needed to pull them off daily. But with assistance from committed students and teachers, video announcements could easily become a reality. Many students at East Meck love to be in front of the camera and would enjoy being on the announcements. East Meck is also home to many tech-savvy students that could help with behind-the-scenes work.

Daily video announcements are a more informative version of news and help students and teachers receive important information. We encourage steps to be made towards this improvement in our school.

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF Noor Hannosh MANAGING EDITOR Hanna Wondmagegn LAYOUT EDITOR Layna Hong

SENIOR STAFF WRITER Miracle Okoro

NEWS CORRESPONDENT Cecilia Whalen

STAFF WRITERS Kate Carroll, Isabel Cosby, Andy Fialko, Ashleigh Fields, Cole Johnson, Stephanie Suster, Bonnie Zhang, Anaya Truss-Williams

BUSINESS MANAGER Brennan Stone

PHOTOGRAPHER/STAFF WRITER Elise Palmer, Jazmyne Irions

ADVISER Bill Allen

EDITORIAL POLICY The Eagle is a student-run forum for East Mecklenburg High School. It is governed by the First Amendment rights guaranteeing freedom of the press, and the guidelines established by the Supreme Court, which interpret those rights for school publications. Editorials represent the opinion of the writers; however, they do not necessarily reflect the views of the school administration.

ADVERTISING For advertising information, contact The Eagle at 980-343-6430 or bill.allen@cms.k12.nc.us. Advertising prices begin at $20 for a sixteenth-page advertisement.

SUBSCRIPTIONS The Eagle is published four times each school year; subscriptions are $15.

COPYRIGHT 2017, THE EAGLE

The Eagle is a member of the Southern Interscholastic Press Association, the North Carolina Scholastic Media Association and Quill and Scroll.