

Canned Food Drive

by: Ezra Faith

The food drive was a traditional and easy activity for students to step up. The drive was held in November. The idea was brought up by guidance counselor, Crystal Barr, for the Beta Club. This canned food drive gave students a subtle yet impactful way to be involved in the community.

"I think the food drive shows school spirit in that a lot of beta club members are involved in giving to the community."

Knock Off v. Name Brand

by: Rory O'Connor

There was an age-old dilemma of whether or not knock-off items were just as good as the real thing. Certain people, like Eric Couch (11), felt that paying for the name-brand on an item was worth the investment because they felt the quality of the item was better. Others, like Savannah Nalley (10) thought that off-brand items were of the same quality so it was better to save some cash.

"Brand names are good when the brand is known for quality, but not just because it's popular."

- Eric Couch (11)

"Name brand things are made for people who aren't comfortable in their own skin."

- Savannah Nalley (10)

CAPTIONS

1. Dressed as Pluto, Kaitlyn Dadisman (12) hands out candy to kids in the senior hallway. Despite having meetings and time to make the decorations, Dadisman took most of them home to work on or create. "Everyday leading up to Halloween in the Halls I would go to Mrs. Walker's room second period and work on decor for our hallway. Thankfully after school on the day of Halloween in the Halls, we had a lot of help," said Dadisman.

2. As community members walk the halls, they are greeted by DC Comic characters. Throughout the hall, the Spero house had the different destinations and resting places of superheroes including the Batcave and Metropolis. "I put all of the big buildings together because it was hard to stack the boxes," said Kaylon Hampton (11).

3. Gumball machine, Kendall Szewczyk (10) and lollipop, Ella Olds (10) wait for incoming community children to fill the halls. Though the Candyland decorations were from last year, they still created a sweet wonderland. "My favorite part about Halloween in the Halls is making memories with my peers. It's a lot of fun, especially making the costumes and putting everything together," said Szewczyk.

4. As one of the six candy distributors in the Candyland portion, Becca Watts (10) smiles from ear to ear. The Tharrohountes hallway included a Candy Castle, giant lollipops, a volcano, and vines hanging from the ceiling. "I have always loved being able to help out when someone needs something. Being able to help bring a smile to people's faces, it warms my heart so that drives me to Halloween in the Halls every year," said Watts.

Dinosaurs, Animals and Superheroes Galore

Halloween in the Halls was an annual event held at Bullitt East and facilitated by staff and students to welcome the community in and hand out candy to younger kids. It was held October 25.

"The positive attitude keeps the community coming back. We try our hardest to make the kids smile and have a good time," said Kendall Szewczyk (10).

Halloween in the Halls filled the school with kids who held their buckets out for candy. As usual, the number of participants grew, as did the time and effort put into the decorations.

"For Halloween in the Halls this year, I did a lot of preparation. At the house meetings, I tried my hardest to get people involved because I knew how much fun it was. I was pretty much in charge, so I made a lot of decorations at home and brought supplies to school so that my friends could help," said Kaitlyn Dadisman (12).

In addition to handing out candy to the children, this event was also a competition between classes. Each hallway was a different theme that belonged to a different house. The freshman (Fortis) were responsible for the "Night at the Movies" hallway. Sophomores (Tharrohountes) had a hallway that was half "Candyland" and half "Dinosaurland." The junior class (Spero) represented "Superheros," and the seniors (Pisti) decorated their hallway half "Zoo" themed and half "Mickey Mouse Clubhouse."

"My girlfriend was in charge of the zoo section so I did a lot for all the themes in the senior zoo section, specifically the arctic area. I was almost 100% sure that we would win. Especially as the night went on, kids loved our area," said Jack Wallace (12). The sophomores beat the seniors for the second year in a row.

Halloween in the Halls produced a sense of nostalgia for some students because they even participated in this event as kids. "I remember as a kid coming through the halls doing the same thing, how happy and fun it was. I want to make those same memories for everyone in the community," said Wallace.

We Learned to Do It The Charger Way

"When I leave Bullitt East I wanna be known for making a change like creating the first Winter Dance we have had here in many years."

- Madison Gauthier (10)

"I want to be known as someone who cared. Someone who was there to help anyone even if I didn't know them. I want to be remembered as compassionate and empathetic."

- Bradley Lewis (12)

"The heart. Someone who always tried to be friends with everyone and showed lots of school spirit and everyone liked."

- Zach Elam (12)
