

Master of Education in Teaching

What will I study?

The Master of Education in Teaching is an online program for classroom teachers and others working in an educational setting who wish to continue their professional development through graduate education. Designed to meet the needs of working educators, this accelerated program is taught by the same faculty who teach on campus and provides opportunities for endorsements, career advancement and educational enrichment.

Choose from one of these three high-demand specializations and be equipped with the knowledge and professional skill sets you need to stand out as a leader in the classroom.

M.Ed. in Teaching - Literacy and Reading

Explore research-based practices and inquiry-learning designed to meet the literacy needs of today's diverse learners in grades preK-12. This specialization meets course requirements for the SC Read to Succeed Literacy Teacher or Literacy Requirement Endorsement.

M.Ed. in Teaching - Project Based Learning

Examine teaching methodology designed to enable preK-12 students to gain knowledge and skills while working for extended periods of time investigating and responding to an authentic, engaging and complex question, problem, or challenge. This specialization meets course requirements for the SC Project Based Learning endorsement.

M.Ed. in Teaching - Multicultural Contexts in Education

Explore instructional strategies and classroom environments that can help students from diverse racial, ethnic, and cultural groups gain the knowledge, skills, and attitudes necessary to thrive within a democratic society.

Design and create your own action research topic based on your area of specialization as part of your graduate-level training in research design, implementation, and data analysis.
