Dr. Crouch’s work focuses on policy-related issues in vulnerable populations at the beginning of life (children) and the end of life (elderly). She has conducted various economic analyses in health outcomes and health education behaviors. Currently she is co-investigator on a study to examine the urban-rural differences in medicare service use and expenditures in the last six months of life. In addition, she is actively participating in several evaluation studies of the Maternal, Infant, and Early Childhood Home Visiting Programs in South Carolina.
